General Information:

This model was homologised as the successor to the Bicarburatore for the Formula 3 racing class of the time. The racing class of the time was also known as the Junior class, which is where the name for this model came from. Unlike its predecessors, the Junior had a modified frame designed by engineer Guido Rossi. The adjustable Sturck dampers and Earles forks provided a modern chassis for the time. Weighing around 70 kg, speeds of around 130 km/h were possible. The design of the tank was by Donnino Rumi. The number plates were signed by Gianni Zonca, who became famous as a factory driver, and Achille Rumi, the son of Donnino Rumi, who immortalised himself in Donninos typical handwriting.
